FUND MANAGER'S COMMENTARY

- We anticipate that financial market volatility will remain elevated at least until the conclusion of the upcoming US election. To mitigate portfolio risk, we will prioritize sectors and stocks with resilient earnings.
- Despite the current market turbulence, we continue to maintain a high equity allocation. We believe Malaysian equities are fundamentally undervalued based on historical earnings and book value multiples, even before the recent market sell-off.
- We maintain a significant overweight position in the consumer sector, as its earnings typically exhibit resilience during volatile market periods. Additionally, the strengthening Malaysian Ringgit could alleviate inflationary pressures and benefit consumer companies with US dollar-denominated input costs.
- We are also increasing our exposure to the plantation sector. Its year-to-date underperformance has created a compelling entry point, given the sector's long-term growth prospects driven by stagnant palm oil production in key producing countries.
- Conversely, we maintain underweight positions in the construction, property, and power sectors due to overvaluation following recent rallies driven primarily by data center-related news. These sectors are susceptible to sharp corrections given their steep valuations.
